Statement	Strongly Disagree	Disagree	Somewhat Agree	Agree	Strongly Agree
Parents with substance use disorders (SUD; sometimes called addiction) can be effective parents.
When a parent refuses SUD treatment they should not be a part of their child/ren's treatment.
If parents with an addiction had enough will power they would not need SUD treatment.
Parents with an SUD should have a voice in decisions about their child/ren's treatment, safety, and custody.
Programs that provide methadone or other medication assisted treatment (such as buprenorphine/suboxone) are just substituting one addiction for another.
